He said that Horace Greeley had introduced as an argument against the eight hour system, that he would be well satisfied to get off with ten hours labor out of the twentyfour, but that he was compelled to labor fourteen or fifteen hours daily; he said the same sophistry had been used by others who had formerly worked at trades, and contended that mental labor did not wear out the system like manual labor. There, some men, he said, had the privilege of going back to the shop and working their eight or ten hours daily, but, he asked, have they done it, or will they do it?
